The Egyptian government has long adopted the tendering system for matters related to private investment. The real estate sector is no exception to this rule. Regardless of the type of project intended, land is acquired by private investors in Egypt through the tendering system.

The government pre-states the intended type of project for each land piece, prior to the announcement of the tender. Residential and tourism projects are the more common type, while commercial, service and industrial projects follow behind closely. The Egyptian government has also begun focusing on social housing projects, the scheme of which has been incorporated in the country's recent tenders. One key example, is the Housing Ministry's plan to offer 60,000 plots of land, a significant portion of which is earmarked for social housing projects.

As one of the more resilient sectors in Egypt, the Egyptian government is working towards strengthening the role of the real estate industry in boosting the country's economy. A clear sign of the extensive efforts the government is allocating to the industry is the amount of land lots tendered in the first six months of the year, with promising plans for the remainder of the year.

In an effort to streamline the process and to make it more profitable, the Board of New Urban Communities Authority (NUCA), headed by the Ministry of Housing, Utilities, and Urban Development, has agreed to establish a company dedicated to handling all matters in relation to land investment throughout the country. The new company will serve as the arm of the state for property investment development.

Tendering Authorities

Land earmarked for investment purposes, regardless of the type of project intended, is offered by the Egyptian government through the tendering system. Four authorities in Egypt are involved in the tendering process: the Minister of Housing, Utilities, and Urban Development, the New Urban Communities Authority (NUCA), the Tourism Development Authority (TDA), and the General Authority for Investment (GAFI).

The Ministry of Housing, Utilities, and Urban Development

The Ministry of Housing, Utilities and Urban Development launched two tenders in the first half of 2016. One of which is considered the biggest land tender in Egypt to date, announced in mid-April of the year.

The land tender includes 21,398 plots, of which 11,076 plots are allotted for social housing projects in 9 cities, 7,564 pieces of land categorized as privileged over 14 new cities, and 2,758 plots

New Urban Communities Authority (NUCA)

Reports have confirmed that NUCA is planning to offer between 50 to 70 land lots during the second half of 2016. The total area offered is planned to reach 1,600 acres in size, and will be offered through the single-window policy. The tender will be announced upon modifying the set down payment for the land, from 25% of its total value to 20%.

The tender will include 18 new cities, and pieces of land will be set according to the expected turnout of each city. The tender includes a 5 year payment plan, plus an interest rate set by the Central Bank of Egypt, at the time of making a payment.

Summary

The first half of 2016 has witnessed a significant leap forward in terms of land investment. Both the TDA and the Ministry of Housing, Utilities, and Urban Development offered massive areas through their latest tenders. The move indicates the significant attention the Egyptian government is giving to the real estate sector. Most land offered by the housing ministry and NUCA are focused on residential and commercial projects, while TDA's land offerings are aimed at encouraging tourism investment throughout coastal areas in the country. The Egyptian government has recently prioritized resolving the lack of supply of low income housing projects, launching projects like that of Dar Misr, as well as earmarking 52% of the ministry's land tenders, this year, for social housing purposes. The scheme has witnessed significant turnout, with 105,353 individuals confirming reservation of social housing land lots.
